Avery Cunningham is a recent graduate of the Honors program and is currently a Graduate Assistant for the Masters in Writing and Publishing Program. During her time at DePaul, she worked -- and continues to work -- with the University Center for Writing-based Learning and received the Undergraduate Summer Research Grant in the summer of 2013. She has also presented at the Spring English Conference and the Honors Thesis Conference in 2014. Outside of DePaul, Avery has edited for literary magazines such as Narrative Magazine and Fifth Wednesday Journal and work with the Chicago Literary Hall of Fame. She continues to work on the novel submitted for her Honors Thesis project. When on campus, she can most likely be found in Arts and Letters Hall enjoying its quiet and spacious study corners. She loves the Honors Program for all of the freedom it has given her to be creative and ambitious. Students in Honors are allowed to explore all of their interests in an environment that's not only academically challenging, but consistently welcoming.